Human Care Group and Bara Vanlig enter long-term partnership to promote mobility, freedom and inclusion

The medical technology company Human Care Group and the non-profit organization Bara Vanlig are entering a long-term partnership with the aim of enabling more people to live fuller, more active lives.

Human Care Group develops, manufactures, and sells assistive devices and healthcare equipment, with a particular focus on mobility, patient transfer, and quality of care. This closely aligns with Bara Vanlig's mission to create better conditions for people with disabilities to live full lives characterized by physical activity, community, and overall well-being.

Through this collaboration, the partners aim to contribute to greater inclusion and increased opportunities for movement and participation in society for people with disabilities. The partnership will, among other things, include support for Bara Vanlig's operations and initiatives that promote the joy of movement, health, and social connection.

"We see a strong connection between Human Care Group's mission to enhance mobility and Bara Vanlig's work to create inclusive environments through physical activity. Together, we can make a real difference," says Mikael Jomer, CEO, Human Care Group.

"For us, movement is about more than physical activity—it creates community, strengthens self-esteem, and enables people to live fuller lives. Partnering with Human Care Group feels both meaningful and aligned with our mission," says Niclas Wennerlund.

The partnership is part of Human Care Group's long-term commitment to community engagement and strengthens both organizations' ambition to foster greater inclusion, where more people are given the opportunity to participate on their own terms.
